Complain All You Want

Everyone complains. It is totally normal and natural thing to do. Complaining has two functions. The first is as a tool for building relationships with others. When we complain, we are sharing our feelings and letting people know what we like and don't like. This has the power to help people form relationships, and nothing unites us like a common enemy. When we complain, the people we talk to might provide solutions to our problems, which can help make the relationships we have with others stronger.

The second use of complaining is a way to process emotions. It can be difficult to name our feelings and understand where they come from. When we complain, we have the chance to talk through our negative emotions. It can be very helpful to give words to whatever pain we are experiencing so that we might feel better.

Many people say that we should always think positively. However, sometimes the truly healthy thing to do is to recognize that something bad is happening, say it plainly, and then move forward.

There are many different types of complaining. For instance, there are people who talk about bad things that have happened, usually in an angry and emotional way. This type of person mainly just wants to receive attention from others instead of solving problems. There are also people who talk about things over and over without taking any action. They tend to focus more on problems than the progress. Studies have shown that both types of complaining can put people who are listening in bad moods. What's more, the person who is complaining is likely to feel worse as well.

The best way to complain is to talk about a problem, then look for a way to make things better. Creating a plan for change with others is also a good way to form strong relationships. Life will never be perfect, but with some effort, we can all learn to complain better.

The Taiwan International Balloon Festival

Taiwan's beauty attracts visitors from around the world. However, Taitung, located in eastern Taiwan, hoped to attract more tourists. The area already had some experience with paragliding, so the local government decided to promote a related activity. It hosted the first Taiwan international Balloon Festival in 2011, which kicked off a yearly tradition.

Since that time, the festival has continued to grow. More than 880,000 people attended the festival in 2012. Some people in Taiwan took interest in hot-air balloons and became professional hot-air balloon pilots. In 2013, some cities around Taiwan held their own hot-air balloon-related events. Taiwan's first hot-air balloon businesses, Skyrainbow Airlines, was established in 2014. This provided a strong foundation for balloon activities in Taitung.

Something new is added to the festival every year. In 2015, there were 10 special-themed balloons. A hot-air balloon competition for international pilots was held in 2016. The following year, the first sunrise lift-off was held at Sanxiantai. In 2018, the Travel Channel named the festival one of the world's top 12 hot-air balloon festivals. The night lift-off activity was added in 2019. While the pandemic forced the many events to stop, Taitung successfully held its festival in 2020. In 2022, the 45-day festival welcomed more than 1.2 million visitors.

If you look at a hot-air balloon, you will notice three main parts. The largest part is called the envelope. This is the beautiful portion that looks like a balloon. The envelope is made of very strong nylon or polyester. It is difficult to pull apart and doesn't burn easily. The next part is the burner. Typically made of metal, this part is used to heat the air inside the envelope to make the balloon rise. The third part is the basket. This is where the people stand. The basket is usually made of light and the flexible wood, such as wicker or rattan.

Hot-air balloons are truly full of hot air. The pilot uses the burner to control the temperature of the air inside the envelope. If the pilot increases the flame and heats more air, the balloon will rise higher. However, the pilot cannot really control which direction the balloon flies because the balloon is pushed by the wind. This means that the pilot must understand the wind conditions for that day and pay attention to the weather. Then, anyone can enjoy a fun breathtaking ride in a hot-air balloon. To see these amazing balloons floating in the sky, check out the Taiwan International Balloon Festival this year in Taitung.

The Joke's on You

April Fools' Day is celebrated every year on April 1. The holiday is an occasion to play harmless tricks on friends and family such as preparing fake food or tapping a “kick me” note on someone's back. Yet, nobody knows exactly how the tradition got started, but there are a number of theories.

Some people think April Falls' Day began as an ancient festival honoring a god who died every winter and came back to life every spring. To celebrate his return, people with dress up in costumes and imitate each other.

The first written reference to April Fools' Day is from a 1561 poem by Eduard De Dene. In the poem, a servant goes out to do some tasks for his master, but when he remembers that the day is April 1, he realizes they are all "fool's tasks."

In Poor Robin's Almanac, the writer explains that some say the first of April is set aside for all Fools' Day. But neither he nor the fools know why people called it so. The origins of the holiday might be a mystery but it is certain that April Fools' Day is here to stay.

The Modern times, companies have used April Fools' Day as an opportunity to play pranks and get attention. In 2014, the US-based media company called NPR published an article called "Why Doesn't America Read Anymore?" In the article, they instructed all the readers to like the post but not comment on it. Everyone sat back and had a laugh as people started commenting to share their opinions on an article that they haven't even read.

Another good example of an April Fools' Day prank was when PayPal, an online payment platform, announced in 2018 that they were adding a new feature to their app that would allow users to print cash right from their phones. The joke went viral and brought them a lot of publicity.

In 2021, a popular cheese prank called Velveeta revealed a skincare line," V by Velveeta," with a promotional video and an email waitlist. The product was completely fake, but many people signed up for their marketing contact list.

Every April 1, many companies trick buyers with fake product ads, news stories, and announcements. Even at the highest levels of business, it's important to keep a good sense of humor.
